As the Institute's medical director, she has the compassion and dedication to empower and educate women about their fibroid treatment choices. Dr. Slonim served as the first female medical staff President at Methodist Dallas Medical Center, where she also served as Director of Interventional Radiology for 15 years. Dr. Slonim not only accounts for one of the few women in the field but has performed over 30,000 procedures during her career and is widely regarded as a leading expert in specific interventional radiology techniques. In 2016, she followed her passion and founded Fibroid Institute Dallas out of concern for the high incidence of surgeries to treat uterine fibroids. As the institute's medical director, she has dedicated her practice to expanding access and educating women about their treatment choices.

Patients praise Dr. Slonim for both her expertise and her kindness, regularly giving her five-star ratings on review websites. Many patients express surprise and gratitude when Dr. Slonim readily shares her personal cell number to help them with their questions and post-procedure care. They are grateful, as well, that she treats both insured and self-pay patients, offering affordable and flexible ways to cover out-of-pocket costs so treatment won't be delayed. "I'm passionate about helping women avoid surgery if they can," she says. "I treat every patient as if she were my sister. I feel honored that women are willing to share their concerns with me." She is also passionate about philanthropy and is involved in numerous local organizations and nonprofits, many of which are focused on women's issues. She is a frequent speaker on women's health issues to community organizations, businesses, and places of worship.
